THE SPIRIT BIRD

Legend has it that when a Mexican village was suffering, a woman watched a bird struggling to perch on an agave.

The bird pierced the heart of the sacred plant, revealing its nectar, which restored her village.

Today, a spirit bird charm graces each Tequila Partida bottle to symbolize the how the precious agave nectar was discovered.

PALATE

Presence of cooked agave with hints of vanilla, maple syrup, anise, quince, and dried fruits

TASTING DESCRIPTION

Excellent clarity; citron color. Wow, I immediately like this laser focused opening aromas that features keenly herbal scents of sage, fennel, anise, savory, and bay leaf (laurel), as well as green chili pepper, leather, and green tomato vine; secondary inhalations pick up subtler notes of road tar, quince, casaba melon, hard boiled egg, brown butter, and black peppercorn. Entry flavors are grapy, winey, and berry-like and that fruitiness dominates the early stage, except for the foundational agave vegetal/herbaceous taste; midpalate highlights the sherry cask/agave plant marriage via the succulent, semisweet flavor that's not short on agave syrup richness and tanginess; in fact, the agave presence is found mostly in the lush texture. Concludes long in the throat, moderately peppery/spicy, not as sweet as the midpalate and therefore more herbal and green vegetable-like. This is the dawn of a promising new era for 100% agave tequila, one that's been needed for at least a decade. Note the abv level.

PALATE

Exploding flavors of dried fruits, cooked agave, toasted oak, vanilla, and nuts

TASTING DESCRIPTION

Crystalline, sediment free appearance; pewter-like silvery color. Upfront, I find distinctive aromatic notes of toasted hazelnut, salted butter, carob, and green tobacco leaves; after more aeration, the fragrances pick up earthy, mineral-like scents of terra cotta, coriander, sage, lead pencil, tin can, and dill. Entry showcases more agave character than the bouquet, as dry, slightly bittersweet flavors of carbon/charcoal, black tea, caramelized onion, green olive, and grilled pineapple cover the palate; midpalate stage is where the inclusion of sherry cask emerges and it's this pivotal addition of gentle, winery sweetness that accentuates the agave elements that last deep into the near-succulent, pleasingly pruny aftertaste.

PALATE

TASTING DESCRIPTION

Goldenrod/harvest gold color; impeccably clear and clean. Oh yeah, now we're talking burnt matches, smoldering campfire embers, egg yolks/hard boiled egg, bacon fat, lard, and shallot-like aromas that all echo earthy agave; secondary whiffs detect baked scents of pear, nectarine, and white grapes/raisins that now dominate the bouquet as the herbal/vegetal/smoky aspects recede a bit. Entry owns an impactful, multilevel flavor of pickle brine/dill and baked orchard and vineyard fruits that together present the taste buds with a dramatically exciting and piquant 100% agave flavor experience unlike and better than any other; midpalate mirrors the entry stage, adding a larger portion of mince meat-like sherry cask flavor without sacrificing the earthy agave core taste. Finishes long, ripe, semisweet, vegetal, and dill-like. I believe that it's the 45% abv that makes this tequila so memorable as much as it is the sherry cask finishing.
